

FREE TB Advice

Fed up of playing the TB lottery?

If so, you can access tailored advice from the TB Advisory Service to reduce the risk and impact of bovine TB on your farm.

Experienced farm advisers are available to give advice by telephone or during two free on-farm advisory visits.

The service is funded by Defra, so there is no cost to eligible farmers.

Comments from a number of farmers that have been visited by the TB Advisory Service team

"The service and visit were completely free, quickly and easily arranged and was very helpful. The adviser was very knowledgeable and gave me some great information. This is a very useful service and I would recommend it to anyone."

Mr Blatchford, Somerset

"As this was a new breakdown for us, we felt powerless and overwhelmed. The adviser was very hands on, and understood a lot about problems that we could overcome easily. His advice and report helped us to do something about our situation."

Beef Farmer, Dorset.

"I found the visit to be very useful and informative; it was interesting to have a new pair of eyes looking at the problems we face and offering practical advice on how to reduce our risks in the future.

I no longer feel that the presence of TB on the farm is inevitable and I feel more confident that we can work to reduce bought in risks as well as that from wildlife vectors."

Mark Jelley, Northamptonshire

"We primarily produce animals for genetics, so TB would be nothing short of disastrous. The adviser quickly identified our biggest risk as being wildlife incursion.

We have no setts on our land, and had intended to dig a badger fence into the boundaries of all our fields. We were advised that correctly installed electric fencing would be perfectly adequate to ensure our black and white friends held their party elsewhere, saving us both time and money."
